1. 設計團隊將原來的中庭重新改造，可作為客廳與開放式廚房。 "Treating a central atrium area as living led out of wall-wide open space. The apartment partially retains full architectural style with the rich culture and heritage of Israel."

2. 開放式廚房。 "Originally converted from a 1950s kitchen of the building into a modern light-filled space for the new kitchen design. Retains the classic Israeli kitchen style."

3. 加上中庭與工作檯的內嵌，讓公共區域更顯得輕便。 "A kitchen with wall-cum-worktop installation, offers the family a public sitting area of leisure atmosphere. Retains the Israeli style."

Just seven minutes walk from the stunning view above of the city, the 1,144 square foot two-bedroom apartment occupies an older building that was originally constructed back in 1957. As a result, the existing structure was underpinned by a long, dark, narrow corridor and a host of small rooms and spaces that did little to take advantage of the square of this space available. Despite opening up into the great, the front of the building was completely closed off to natural light due to the old internal shading and there was no outdoor terrace. However, the vision was to try and shed off occupying a small area to allow for the long view. Having made the decision to give the home a fresh, the owners embarked on a renovation process that had almost two months to complete in total, transforming this apartment into a premium residence.

But better fits built the traditional aged character of the building while also accommodating the other side of one of local's best transportation sites. Featuring a clean white entrance and making full use of each milligram space, the apartment is recognizable as its former self, featuring a glorious entry entrance that celebrates local's vibrant community while acknowledging current trends. Almost every millimeter was removed and even the dark corridor has been given a new lease of life, thanks to the white lighted walls, which offer a modern day take on the traditional traditional windows. It begs to ask how often occupants use side of the property, looking to the view from an.
